They won't always have an outbound tracking number (this one does, 01215013186607) but if the status is "Shipped" it will have been, and on the date mentioned. At this point our best course of action is to contact the seller, letting them know the tracking (if available) and asking them to review/refund anything Ezi had initially rejected. Exercise a little judgement around shipping timeframes, it's unlikely a UK based seller will have received a package sent from The Netherlands within 24 hours etc.

The outbound page will also have a list of the other orders that were included in the same parcel from Ezi to the seller:

This can be handy with working out if a seller has received any of the other orders from the same package.
